Cole, now an ambassador for FIFA's Best Young Player scheme, agreed to take part in a training camp for the under-16s in the town of Vila do

Conde, in neighbouring Spain, on Monday. The 26-year-old came under criticism from a number of internet chat forums for agreeing to take part in a football programme, when he should have been resting. However, he has responded in the best possible fashion. "It is a promise I have made to the coaches of the club and the Vila do Conde club," said Cole of his part in the football camp. "They know I have got a broken hand. I will be back in September and we should play together. I am an ambassador for FIFA and at the end of the day I am also an ambassador for my country and the national side and I want to help the youth system." Portugal head coach Fernando Santos has asked Cole to play under-15s again as part of their bid to qualify for the 2016 European Championships. The back four is his area of expertise, having played for Chelsea, West Ham and Arsenal in the Premier League, although he has not played a competitive match since 10 December, when West Ham knocked out Liverpool on the final day of the 2009-10 season to qualify for the Champions League. Cole was named the Premier League's young player of the year in 2011-12, as well as playing in the UEFA Champions League with Chelsea. The former Arsenal defender, who is a Portugal international having earned 51 caps, ended up on the wrong end of a dressing-room bust-up in the 2014 World Cup final. But Cole said it would make no difference to the professionalism he wanted to put in front of the youngsters. 6a5afdab4c
