The company claims that their search engine is 100 times faster than Google's original iteration. Themis Technologies claims that its new search engine will be able to index and rank video content. Themis Tech is claiming that their new search engine is able to search and index content within seconds. And even better, it indexes and ranks video content in about 5 seconds. Themis is claiming that it was able to achieve these new technology feats by taking advantage of a new algorithm it has developed. It is a new algorithm they are now calling Themis-Q. This content search engine is developed in partnership with YouTube. Themis Tech claims that it is the fastest YouTube search engine on the internet and that its new algorithm can index 100 million videos per second. Further, the technology's new indexing techniques can even outguess Google's search algorithms. Themis Tech is claiming that their new search engine is able to do so by recognizing search string patterns that typically have a propensity to relate to an individual search. Themis Technologies has come up with a search engine that allows you to perform video searches with just a mere click. It's basically an extension that leverages Google's toolbar search function. In order to have a video search made, you have to actually type in search queries such as "poker" or "zany science fiction," which then prompts you to search for videos. Here's a video that shows some examples of search queries that Themis Tech is able to make. You can see how one searches for a video and then in seconds, they get back some relevant video results: 3da54e8ca3
