Productivity Pioneer is a simple and useful program that focuses on two main aspects: the ability to use the Internet from a particular website and the ability to log off. Pioneer is a powerful tool that can be used for many things, but the main usage involves searching through internet to get information about something or other, just to click on the link that comes up as a result of the search and open a site. In other words, you don't need to be connected to the internet to use this program. You can choose to sign up for a free Pioneer account to get all the features for the free version, but it will then track all of your activity, so it's not a completely anonymous experience. On the

I installed the PPA that gives access to the unstable PPA: sudo add-apt-repository ppa:webupd8team/selenium sudo apt-get update But I'm finding that whenever I try to install selenium, it defaults to the version that is in the ubuntu repositories. For example, when I try to install version 2.43.0: sudo apt-get install selenium I get this error: Reading package lists... Done Building dependency tree Reading state information... Done selenium is already the newest version. 0 upgraded, 0 newly installed, 0 to remove and 0 not upgraded. I also tried adding the proposed PPA sudo add-apt-repository ppa:webupd8team/proposed But that also didn't seem to work. I even tried a specific version of selenium (2.43.0) and that failed to install. When I search for this version of selenium in the Ubuntu Software Center, I only find versions that are either in the ubuntu repositories or unstable. So it's not really clear how to install a specific version of selenium. Any ideas? A: The packages from the official PPA are being synced from Debian to Ubuntu by Launchpad, but the process does not include a version update. Therefore, you can upgrade the packages using the PPAs mentioned in How to add PPA repository? I use Ubuntu 12.04 LTS, so the command to upgrade is: sudo apt-get install -t quantal-updates selenium You can verify that the package is up to date using the package manager: $ apt-cache policy selenium selenium: Installed: 2.43.0+dfsg-2ubuntu1~2ppa1~webupd8~precise Candidate: 2.43.0+dfsg-2ubuntu1~2ppa1
