Luther Strange. In a series of TV and radio ads, Democrat Ron Tallon ran on record of his own: that he's never met with President Obama, and is in fact running to support Republicans in Congress. That has put him in line to be one of Alabama's only three Democratic senators this year, alongside two independents who caucus with the Democrats. Tallon, a former state lawmaker and judge, is facing off against appointed incumbent and Tea Party favorite Strange, who is running under the support of ex-Gov. and former U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions and Roy Moore. In an interview on Monday, Tallon said both sides have used the campaign of Strange, who is the state's former attorney general, as a proxy for the 2012 Republican presidential campaign. "It's not so much a U.S. Senate race," said Tallon, who has said he wants to focus on the issues and not on the other senators. "Ron and I both work in the local government. We have no differences. And, you know what? One of our adversaries is the president of the United States," he said. "This race is about who we're going to have in the United States Senate and we have that right now." Moore said he would have no comment on Tallon. Strange declined comment. National Democrats are also gearing up for a fight. "The only thing you can say about the Strange campaign is that it's a Republican campaign with Democrat financing," said Democratic National Committee Political Director Brad Woodhouse. The ad blitz is being financed by the Alabama Democratic Conference, the Democratic Party arm in the state. Tallon said the support of national Democrats will be a key factor in his race. At the end of November, the DNC endorsed Tallon over Strange. But Tallon said he has not spoken with any national Democratic officials since then, and hasn't met with a member of the DNC or any other national Democratic official. To say he's not looking for help, Tallon

We spoke with several candidates with over ten years of experience, but many lived in another state so we knew it would be a challenge to work with them and we had to pass on a lot of candidates. Our company is an elite 7 Star Certified with over 14 million dollars of remodeling work completed, but many of our clients will have a home improvement project that is only a couple thousand dollars. With the growing economy we are seeing many lower cost, well-performing contractors apply for the new Angie's list ratings. We have a goal for our team to have at least 75% of our work rated 5 stars or higher. We have seen in the past that new Angie's list rankings are always higher than the old rankings. We are seeing on average 30% increase in new clients. That is why our Angie's List manager has increased her hours and a trip to their home office is in our near future. With only one of us full-time at the office we are looking forward to training the team and making them more effective. We have added team members to make it more efficient and cover larger areas. The Angie's List review site has been a great tool for us and we encourage you to check it out at We have heard recently that even if a contractor does not have a good reputation, they can still be approved if a large amount of business is used to verify the review. In the past we had a common fee schedule for all of our clients. However, we have found the turnover in our business to be higher so we are adding a fee to the job cost which we are using the money to offset the higher costs. This should help our families and also help our team.
