**Fireworks Layers** Fireworks has a unique feature in that layers can be used to represent the individual elements of a design. In other image-editing applications such as Photoshop, layers are a drawback—either they are included in the final document or they are used to segment elements that need to be edited separately. One of the unique aspects of Fireworks is that it has a dedicated layer palette that is directly available from the top of the document area (Figure 5-10). The individual layers can be dragged and moved around to modify them in a live environment. Layers can be grouped to allow a group of layers to be combined into a single layer that can be edited as one unit. Just use the Layer ► Group or Layer ► Ungroup commands. **Figure 5-10** Layers palette in Fireworks. With

From old Photoshop there are mostly only two types of plugins, one for design purposes and the other for image manipulation. This article will teach you how to install and use all of the Photoshop Elements 8 plugins. If you're using a newer version of Photoshop Elements or a different version of Photoshop, you'll still be able to use these plugins. I have a budget of $35.00. If you're on a tighter budget, and don't mind a more manual and less powerful Photoshop version, you should check out the "Chris's Photoshop CS5 Guides" series. Read on to learn more. This article will cover both the free and paid plugins for Photoshop Elements. There are five categories: design, photo editing, vector graphics, photo stream, and healing tools. For each plugin, I will give a link to the plugin on Adobe's website. If you don't see a link to the plugin on Adobe's website, it's because I couldn't find a link, so you'll have to download and install the plugin yourself. Vector Graphics Bridges This plugin is not required. However, you may find it helpful. It's included in the Adobe Elements 8 package. Originally designed for adding particles to videos, Bridges allows you to add particles to your photos. Download Bridges Design Burn This plugin is not required. However, you may find it helpful. It's included in the Adobe Elements 8 package. What's New in the Retro Text Photoshop Download?

The world's first blockchain-based "smart" streetlight is to be unveiled in October. A system of lights that uses blockchain to enable autonomous payments between users and the company running the streetlight, developed by Traidcraft, is set to be deployed in New York City later this year. The streetlight will act as an extension of the smart city project developed by venture capital-backed blockchain firm Zilliqa and approved by the New York City Economic Development Corporation last year. Using blockchain, Zilliqa's blockchain will be used to "legally secure" payments for lights. In the new system, the lights would send payments to users on the blockchain, which can only be spent on related services. The company is "excited to be bringing Traidcraft's light control products, Zilliqa's Zilliqa network and the Traidcraft token framework to the project," said the CEO of Traidcraft, Emily Massicotte. "When this streetlight is rolled out later this year, it will be the first step in creating a smart city for not only New York City, but the many other locations in the U.S., Canada and the world that may want to adopt this model." The streetlight is expected to spend roughly 20 minutes being installed, and subsequent maintenance will be handled by another company, Fredo. According to Traidcraft, the upgrade could be completed in two hours. The company aims to bring the first phase of its smart city project to fruition by 2018. "When we announced the first phase of the project in 2017, we stated that we planned to scale up from our proof-of-concept to a full, diverse token economy by the end of 2018. And we are well on our way," Zilliqa CEO Xinshu Dong told IBTimes. "Both Zilliqa and our ecosystem partners are excited about this new initiative as it enables a decentralized and interconnected model for a city," Dong added. New York City is one of the first places to be equipped with the technology. "There's huge potential for some of the other cities to embrace this, but this is a first step for a city to start changing its infrastructure and its landscape to be more connected and more efficient," said Massicotte. "Our partnership with Zilliqa allows the light maintenance of the streetlights to be completely automated and payments are made in real time.
