Deep frying is a traditional method of preparing chicken wings. This traditional method involves placing chicken wings in a deep fat, which is heated to a desired temperature and maintained for an extended period. The wings are cooked and are subsequently cooled and served to consumers. Deep frying of foods has long been considered a problem by those of us who do not wish to use the fat. In particular, deep frying has been a health risk to many consumers, which can result in obesity. Thus, a need exists for a method of preparing chicken wings without the need for deep frying. Further, a need exists for a method of preparing chicken wings that does not involve the use of unhealthy deep fat.

I passed my pre-registration nursing course with a first. Previously I was in the advanced college nursing course which was a whole new ball game - but this was just a childs play compared to the course and exam (which was really scary)! This course was a brilliant transition from the 3 years of college which had nothing to do with anything you might have seen in a hospital, and it gave me a bit of a grounding before I did my new course - the practical course. The course was made of different parts which gave the whole of it a nice flow: 1. a two days practical stay in a maternity unit (which was scary!) - where I met some lovely ladies and interacted with real working midwives. The ward was freezing, and the staff were scary, but it was still really fun to work in and so different to the setting I'd been in previously. 3. a two days in hospice, where we got to see some of the issues of palliative care. Again, I was in the middle of a whole ward where everyone was terribly ill. And yet it was a lovely atmosphere and a lovely place to be in. 4. a last day on my own. It was really scary - but it was
