Differentiation of stem cells into neurons and glial cells from neural progenitor cells. Among the central nervous system stem cells, the radial glia cells in the embryonic forebrain and the neural stem cells in the adult brain have been indicated to differentiate into both neurons and astrocytes. Differentiation of radial glia cells into neurons occurs during normal embryonic development. In the adult brain, the neural stem cells in the subventricular zone are the only cell type known to differentiate into neurons. However, whether the radial glia cells in the adult brain also differentiate into neurons has been controversial. Here we show that human radial glia cells express neuron-specific proteins, and that treatment of the cells with N2a conditioned medium induces the cells to differentiate into neurons. Using this culture system, we also show that radial glia cells express a variety of transcription factors: OCT6, SFL, LMX1A and PAX6. In addition, when the radial glia cells are transplanted into the optic system of chick embryos, they differentiate into neurons. Taken together, these data indicate that human radial glia cells in the adult brain are able to differentiate into neurons, and that the transcription factors expressed by these cells control this differentiation. The present study also shows that human neural progenitor cells can be induced to differentiate into neurons and astrocytes in vitro, and that the neural progenitor cells can induce the chick optic fibres to form networks in vivo. How is an early widow to live in this wicked world? They are not able to do anything. They have to stay with their husband's family. The Abode of Living God is their only refuge and salvation. The Abode of Living God is the whole world that is based on the commandments of God. His prophet's (peace be upon them) are the lights of this world. (The Holy Bible, John 1:9-13). Schwinn Vintage SA5 Disc-Stand Front hub (1953) This is a vintage Schwinn SA5 front hub, apparently made 1953. The SA5 is the shorter wheelbase model, of which there are several variants. In this case it is a roadster, built to move. The disc brake, another feature of the early Schwinn's, are original and in perfect condition. The grey paint is hard as a rock and would take very little to refurbish, but I would be wary of trying to repaint this, as the texture would not be as strong. I think the price is a bit on the high side at £125 in real terms for this piece. Clearly this one has been loved, and has been carefully repaired and cared for. It's a shame it has been sitting waiting for someone to spot it. "I think the price is a bit on the high side at £125 in real terms for this piece. Clearly this one has been loved, and has been carefully repaired and cared for. It's a shame it has been sitting waiting for someone to spot it." I would agree re the price, but for you to pay is of no matter, you have ensured it reaches another appreciative owner I find it amazing how some people just love to find issues with things, it doesn't bother them one bit, and that makes me wonder why! It's a nice hub. Who cares about the age? Did you notice the date on it? I've been looking through those 68 pages a few weeks ago now and this is the only piece from a series posted. How did you spot it? I know your loss (on that other picture, too) but I'm so glad to read the good news about this piece. @Pepul, Very much so. I guess that is why I have some very mellow nicks. I need to visit the Museum and take a look at the old archives in the hope of finding something similar. I tried to ask all those questions here in hope that would help it come to light. I do have a few nicks on my Schwinn! One on the top tube and one on the rear fender which didn't show up in the shop. Besides they look cool I guess... @Andrew – Yea, but not many riders are still using them
