I want to write something like this: $arr[['add_member'] = array('email' => $email, 'password' => $password,'login' => $login,'password' => $password,'my_connection' => $my_connection); Is there a way to do that? A: Every array in PHP is basically a hash table. The [] is used to create an array-name, and you can use [] in 2 ways: This way works like a normal associative array: $arr[['add_member'] = array('email' => $email, 'password' => $password); This way stores more than 1 key/value: $arr[['add_member']][] = array('email' => $email, 'password' => $password); // or $arr[['add_member'] = array('email' => $email, 'password' => $password, 'login' => $login, 'password' => $password,'my_connection' => $my_connection); // or $arr[['add_member']][] = array('email' => $email, 'password' => $password, 'login' => $login, 'password' => $password, 'my_connection' => $my_connection);

To get the data i do this. var str = "1234567890"; var res = str.split(""); The res array looks like this: ["1234567890"] But what i want is res = [12345,67890] I have already search but i could not find any solution. Please give me a suggestion how i can do this in Javascript A: If you're using modern JavaScript, you can use the.reduce() method for this purpose, like so: const str = "1234567890"; const result = [str].reduce((a, c, i, ar) => { a[i] = c; return a; }, []); console.log(result); The.reduce() method takes a function that maps the incoming values (starts as an empty array), and returns a single element result array. In this function we just modify the result
