Image: Creative Commons Attribution license Today's Photoshop is a powerful tool. It can alter image details. It can convert images into other image formats and can even create video that can be played on all sorts of devices, including cell phones. With the release of Photoshop CS4, users can now create animated vector graphics or with the combination of Photoshop and After Effects, it's possible to produce 3D-animated objects, such as a spherical ball floating on the screen. Photoshop supports many file formats. It can open more than a dozen different file formats, including the industry standard JPEG, but also TIFF, GIF, and PNG. However, it is important to realize that Photoshop can read and write many formats other than images, including PDF, SVG, XPS, and EMF. If you need to create a document that contains multiple layers, Photoshop is a powerful tool for this, too. There are different tools and features within Photoshop that allow you to create unique images. These tools are often combined to create interesting effects. However, you can use Photoshop to do any number of things. The following is a quick guide to some of the tools and features available in Photoshop. Color Modes There are two basic types of color modes: RGB (red-green-blue) and CMYK (cyan-magenta-yellow-black). While CMYK color mode is generally used for printing, RGB mode is used for images on the Web. There are many different ways to manipulate color in an image. The most common tools include: Changing the color profile. This tool allows you to create custom color profiles for each image. To do this, create a new document and select the image you want to change. Then use the tool bar to change the profile, or choose it from the drop-down list. [A case of IgA nephropathy associated with acute renal failure and renal crisis]. A patient is reported with acute renal failure due to IgA nephropathy. After the first renal biopsy, which revealed focal glomerulosclerosis, acute renal failure developed. He presented with nausea, vomiting and extreme fatigue. Although intravenous immunoglobulin was administered to treat acute renal failure, high-dose corticosteroid therapy proved ineffective. Then, we performed a second renal biopsy on admission, and the presence of subepithelial nodules or crescentic glomerulosclerosis was recognized. Although he presented similar clinical symptoms as in IgA nephropathy and died of renal crisis, the second renal biopsy clearly showed mild changes of IgA nephropathy. This case suggested the possibility that acute renal failure is the result of a reduced glomerular filtration rate caused by papillary necrosis or a decreased number of crescents.U.S. Army soldiers fill in a bullet hole in an on-base apartment building in the Helmand province, Afghanistan, Feb. 12, 2010. / Reuters/ – Afghanistan's arid southern province of Helmand, which has served as a lucrative poppy-growing hub for drug traffickers for the past two decades, is to be handed to a new governor in a sign of the security gains achieved by U.S.-led forces. The southern province of Kandahar, which has long been a stronghold of the Taliban, has already been turned over to an outsider as part of last December's transfer of governance responsibility to Afghan forces. Dandan, a prosperous district of Helmand, is to be handed to a provincial governor and a shura council representative on August 31. "This is a very important day for Kandahar and Helmand," Kandahar governor Zalmay Wesa said. "Even the Taliban will have no excuse to launch attacks against this district as it will be under the direct control of the Afghan government." Previously U.S. forces battled for control of the district until they seized control in late 2006. Kandahar, the birthplace of the Taliban, suffered some of the most fierce fighting in Afghanistan and became the heartland of the insurgency as the Taliban gained power in Afghanistan in the 1990s. Under a coalition agreement, the United States will be able to maintain a large military presence in the area for a time, until forces from Afghanistan assume responsibility
