For those less confident with their digital photography or video skills, "Sight," a $9.99 app from Adobe that automatically detects and corrects facial expressions for group photos and videos, might be just the thing. Developers say the app can identify "microexpressions" that reveal a person's true emotions, including excitement, surprise, sadness, fear, contentment as well as anger and disgust. The app blurs out moving objects and masked portions of an image to leave only the face clearly visible. The app works in real time, telling users whether the app has detected a facial expression. "Sight" scans up to 50 images and 1 minute of video in one session. It has four settings: for "Basic" is a $4.99 extra charge for "detailed" and "extreme settings" are $9.99 and $19.99, respectively. At the moment, the app is also exclusive to Android devices.
