Cats are household pets, playmates and companion animals. In addition to their ability to provide warmth and companionship to humans, cats are also valued for their ability to hunt rodents and birds and to defend their territory. Cats are well adapted to hunting for food and play and are often called the "cat-and-mouse" because they spend their entire lives in pursuit of their favorite prey. There are many species of cats with widely varying appearances, personalities, behaviors and needs. Among the most popular cats are the shorthair (predominantly white or partially white) and the longhair (typically black or brown, but colored in a wide variety of hues and patterns). The best known and most loved of all breeds of cats are the tabby, the hairless shorthair and the Siamese. The recent availability of inexpensive production of cat food has allowed breeders to create a number of new breeds. These new breeds include the Singapore, Chausie, Cornish Rex, Bambino, Longhair, and Ragd
