In recent years, motion capture has only been successfully used in limited game genres, such as 2D fighting games and soccer games, due to the sheer complexity of capturing and processing the data required to bring the rigors of real-life movement into games. Technology has now advanced to the point where we can capture all player motions in 3D with the necessary accuracy for FIFA's detailed, realistic physics. As a result, and as shown by the footage above, FIFA 22 will feature unprecedented game controls, new moves and in-depth ball physics. The use of motion capture technology also enables us to present the game in a never-before-seen light, replicating, with amazing depth, the aesthetic and feel of the real-world. The FIFA player models are the most detailed we have ever seen in any sport game; they capture the diversity in body shape, physique and functional movement, such as turning, side-to-side and backwards and forwards jumping, as well as the workability of the players to perform complex actions. 5 Star Player Models We are happy to announce that in FIFA 22, we will deliver 5 new, authentic 5-star player models for all 20 clubs in our licensed player database. This is a milestone for our long-term development of video games and our commitment to deliver the most authentic and realistic representation of the real-world. Working alongside our expert designers, we went through extensive analysis of the player movements of more than 2,000 players to replicate the aesthetics and physicality of the real-world. With this data, we then created the most advanced player models to date. As with FIFA 17, we don't intend to add a lot of new kits to the game, but we will continue to evolve our current squad kits to add more finesse, authenticity and design to the look and feel of a player. In FIFA 22, these kits will give a very individual and refined approach to player modelling. For example, the FBA and Azerbaijan kits feature more detail in the textures of the shirts, while the normal and hues of our current kits are a mix of two different shirt material types. The kits in FIFA 22 will feature more finesse and detail than before, and players will be able to see the difference. We will have more information about the new kits in future previews. The squad for all 20 clubs in our licensing program, including high-
