Synthesis and characterization of new platinum(II) complexes with glutathione as a targeting moiety. In this research new glutathioneplatinum(II) complexes were synthesized and characterized by IR, UV, NMR, and electrospray ionization mass spectrometry (ESI-MS). The glutathione-platinum(II) complex (GS-Pt) was synthesized by reacting glutathione with cis-[Pt(NH(3))(2)Cl(2)] and characterized by microanalysis, ESI-MS, IR, and UV spectroscopy. The DNA binding of (GS-Pt) with calf thymus DNA was studied with fluorescence spectrophotometry. The fluorescence data were analyzed by the Benesi-Hildebrand method, lead(II), and calf thymus DNA fluorescence quenching experiments, the obtained K(b) and binding ratio show that the (GS-Pt) binds with DNA by intercalative mode. The cytotoxicity of the (GS-Pt) complex was investigated against T-24 and A-549 cell lines. The IC(50) values for the (GS-Pt) complex were higher than those of cisplatin against human cancer cell lines. The (GS-Pt) complex had higher levels of growth inhibition and cell uptake than cisplatin in MDA-MB 231 breast cancer cells. These results indicate that glutathione is a suitable ligand for coordination to platinum to improve anticancer activity and cellular uptake. import { mapState } from 'vuex'; import { stub } from '../__stubs__/index'; export default { name: 'Stub', inject: { store: mapState(['store']) }, methods: { render: () => this.$el } }; Changes in ghrelin and leptin levels during Ramadan fasting: a pilot study.
