Field of the Invention This invention relates to a head driving device for use with a magnetic disk apparatus, a floppy disk apparatus, or the like. 2. Description of the Related Art Conventionally, there is known a head driving device used for a magnetic disk apparatus, a floppy disk apparatus, or the like. This type of known head driving device includes a current source circuit arranged to provide a large current in a predetermined period when a magnetic head is driven, and a braking circuit arranged to provide a voltage to reduce a current applied to a coil of a head driving coil. The current supplied by the current source circuit flows through the head driving coil and the magnetic head is driven. When the magnetic head is driven, it is controlled in such a way that the large current flows through the head driving coil in the predetermined period, and that the voltage supplied by the braking circuit is larger than a potential generated at the head driving coil. In this conventional apparatus, however, when the potential at the head driving coil is increased in response to an abrupt increase in a current supplied to the head driving coil, the driving force to the head driving coil is suddenly increased. Therefore, in some cases, the magnetic head is damaged. Another conventional head driving device is disclosed in Japanese Patent Publication Laid-Open No. Sho 63-213411. This conventional apparatus is arranged to include a control circuit for performing on-off control to intermittently supply the large current in the predetermined period, a current detecting circuit for detecting a current flowing in the coil and voltage detecting circuit for detecting a potential of the coil. The potential is reduced when the current supplied to the coil is abruptly increased, and a value obtained by adding a predetermined amount to the potential is compared with a predetermined threshold value by the control circuit so that the current supplied to the coil is reduced when the large current is intermittently supplied. In the apparatus described above, however, the drive of the magnetic head is interrupted when the potential of the coil is increased by a large amount, and the current supplied to the coil is reduced

But it seems that the sanitation worker, surnamed Li, is not the only one making a living transporting garbage. According to a report in The Paper, Li was transporting containers of black garbage from a landfill when a garbage truck skidded into a motorcycle carrying four people, including a driver surnamed Zhu, and a female passenger surnamed Wu. The video, which was reportedly shot by a man riding a motorcycle from the rear and provided to the paper, shows the garbage truck lurching into the motorcycle when the latter was crossing over a white line. The video shows Zhu and Wu's motorcyclist flying into the air after the collision. The people on the motorcycle suffered minor injuries. Li was ordered by court to pay compensation for the injuries to the two motorcyclists. He was then given a heavier fine for his driving offense.It is well known in the art that the invention and development of membranes is an area of intense technological attention. In particular, several major considerations are parameters of a membrane material and the influence of membrane operation variables on the performance of the membrane. However, to date, most membrane development has been done in an empirical sense without understanding of the physics or chemistry of the membrane material itself. As a result, it is not possible for a person skilled in the art to specifically recommend a unique membrane for a specific operation. For example, it is known that, in the field of reverse osmosis (RO) membrane development, the membrane performance is known to be influenced by the operating variables such as salt type, temperature, pressure, volume fraction of feed, feed concentration, flow rate, and membrane cycle operation.
