Vacuum-ultraviolet photolysis of vanadium precursor (ethyl vanadate) in nitrogen/argon (Ar) atmosphere leads to the formation of hollow tubular V(4)C(8)O(16) nanoparticles with structural and morphological features that can be well-controlled by the fabrication process. X-ray diffraction (XRD), electron microscopy (TEM, high-resolution transmission electron microscopy (HRTEM), and high-angle annular dark field scanning TEM (HAADF-STEM)), and X-ray photoelectron spectroscopy (XPS) characterizations confirmed that the hollow tubular V(4)C(8)O(16) nanoparticles consist of single crystal carbon enveloped by vanadium carbide and are single crystalline in the tubular structure. High-temperature catalytic methanation of natural gas over V(4)C(8)O(16) reveals that the hollow tubular V(4)C(8)O(16) exhibits better catalytic performance than that of nanospheres (50 nm) and nanorods (50 nm). The higher catalytic activity of hollow tubular V(4)C(8)O(16) can be attributed to the hollow structure and interfacial areas that provide more active sites on the V(4)C(8)O(16) surfaces./ * @file * Styling for DataTables' toolbar * * @author Christoffer Wunsch */ / * @section jQueryUI Select2 * * Remove the paddings of the toolbar and set the height to match the select2 height */ table.select2_no_border { border: none; padding: 0;

More particularly, the invention relates to apparatus which uses electrical current to remove nitrogen and phosphorous from waste water. Water containing nitrogen is generally discharged from municipal or industrial plants. The discharge is regulated by law. The discharge of phosphorous from municipal and industrial plants is prohibited by the law. Discharge of nitrogen from municipal or industrial plants must, therefore, be reduced or substantially eliminated. It is known that certain nitrogen compounds can be removed from waste water by causing the waste water to flow through a bed of iron containing granular activated carbon. When the waste water flows through the carbon bed, the nitrogen compounds are adsorbed on the carbon bed. The waste water treated with such a carbon bed is less polluted than the waste water discharged from a municipal or industrial plant and, thus, is environmentally more acceptable. Considerable research has been devoted to the development of devices which utilize such a carbon bed to remove nitrogen from waste water. Most such devices are based on the use of a bed of granular activated carbon. Typically, the granular activated carbon is disposed in a container. Such a carbon bed
