The present invention relates to a control circuit for an electronic solenoid valve, and particularly to a control circuit for controlling a solenoid valve under the influence of a solenoid coil for normally conducting communication therewith in a valve-opened state. FIG. 3 shows a conventional solenoid valve. In a solenoid valve 51, a fixed core 52 is fitted in an outer case 53, and a bobbin 55 for holding an exciting coil 54 therein is fitted in the outer case 53. When the exciting coil 54 is energized, a valve body 56 moves toward the right in the figure to reduce the volume of a fluid passage 57 inside the outer case 53, thereby causing intake of the fluid into the outer case 53. In such solenoid valves as are shown in FIG. 3, the fluid passage is normally closed with a pressure valve or a check valve when the exciting coil 54 is deenergized. In the solenoid valve 51, the valve body 56 is composed of a metal, and the valve body 56 has a number of terminal parts 58, 59 to be connected to wire harnesses. When the fluid passage 57 is open, the wire harness 60 is connected to the terminal parts 58 and 59 of the valve body 56. When the fluid passage 57 is closed, the wire harness 60 is connected to a fixed core of the exciting coil 54. The wire harnesses 60 and 62 connected to the terminal parts 58 and 59 of the valve body 56 are connected to a power source or control unit as a unit by using connector parts 61

What's new:

Ludoria was a Roman-era civitas of Lucania in the southern region of what is now Italy, named after ludi (games or plays in Latin). The town is generally identified with modern Caiazzo, but other interpretations are possible: Strabo named the city Colofrussia, a predecessor state, and this persisted as a backronym until renamed Ludia, referring to games. The inscription on the Ludia Civic Temple (Latin LUDIA, instans virum), signalled a municipal structure in the Roman Republican era. History Origin of Ludia The origin of Ludia is in Lucania, the area south of Apulia and east of Bruttium. Probably after 338 BC, the territory of Lucania was conquered by Rome. Probably starting at the end of the 6th century AD, Lucania became part of the Roman province of Apulia, and ca. the end of the 1st century AD, into the Roman province of Bruttium. The foundation of the city and the Latin colony of Strabo was allegedly in c. 610. In 610 the general Belisarius and the praetorian prefect Anthemius transported half of the army in the region of the Adriatic to Strabo to make war on the Athamanians and the Abderites (Middle East) and to supply themselves with water. The Abderites were vanquished in a battle near Babuino and the resistance of the Athamanians was crushed by the soldiers of Strabo; Strabo received the half of Lucania subjugated from the Abderites. Strabo took fortresses on the whole territory conquered between the river Aous (Adriatic) to the Daunian mountains. Strabo conquered the territory of Apulia and Lucania, Tarentum, the coastal territory between them, Salapia, the island Taranto and the river Bruttium. Strabo wanted to establish a naval base in the Adriatic Sea for the protection of the Italian coasts (cf. his biography of Belisarius), and founded the port Epidaurus. Strabo established the colony Apollonia, which had been in captivity of the Abderites, because he was hoping to acquire it by a marriage alliance. But the partisans of Narses, who was in alliance with the Goths and with the Veneti, managed to take Taranto and to disarm Strabo. Narses, marching

Today, he is cleaning and putting things away in a hotel in the middle of nowhere. His room is located in the basement, and he is about to sleep when he hears the TV being turned on. In addition, when he turns on the light, the TV is still showing, and it is a drama. It will be hard to forget the scene that shows a ghost. As he presses the knob, the TV volume goes up and he sees the movie again. This game is a scene cut after the prologue, and as he put the knob back, the TV turned off. Moreover, the mystery of the "hidden room" that seems to have been overlooked, and the beginning of the "confession room", also appeared. (01) Chapter01 ■CONFESSION ROOM■ The last place where Jack was murdered. A murder has taken place, and the "ghost of the nightmare" is waiting there.

Once Jack enters the room, he will find some clues. But the entrance to the room is only possible after the occurrence of a number of events, and the events will not change once you start playing. First, you must clear the "confession room", and as a result, the ghost will disappear. Then the door opens, and the next event will take place. ■CHALLENGES■ The fact that the game will be driven by a "nightmare", it's hard to play.
