Field of the Invention This invention relates to a noise cancel system in a speech communications system which allows the speech of the caller and the speech of the recipient, both when at the speaker units, and when at the communication stations, to be transmitted through a communication line. 2. Description of the Prior Art In communication systems using speech for transmission, the coder and decoder is required to reproduce a particular sound corresponding to an input signal in an error free manner. In a communications system which allows more than one party to be simultaneously connected, the speech of the callers, who are not at the speech generators, should not be reproduced by the speech generators, thus preventing any distortion of the speech of the party which is generating speech. However, should the speech of the callers be reproduced, the speech generators would distort the speech that is being transmitted, thus preventing the speech
