“CraftWorld” is an open-ended, in-development sandbox game, with crafting and construction focused on resource gathering, crafting and trading. Players can mine, harvest, research and craft their way to a distinct gameplay experience. Initially starting out with a hand-picked machine, players will gather resources from their environment, explore the land, discover new resources and craft the perfect product. Craftworld is envisioned as a living world, with multiple starting spots, and many ways to advance. The project is open source and on GitHub. Here is a little known fact: No one (I mean no one) has ever created a PowerTools for this game. It's a pretty awesome tool, and without it the crafting experience would be a bit less fun. Download it here: Enjoy and please, leave feedback/reviews. I'm always open for constructive criticism and ideas. Cédric 0:20 "I've just discovered the game and I'm hooked!" 's Blog The weak do not understand the might of the strong To this I humbly bow in penance of my failures and sacrilegies Tuesday, May 29, 2006 Back in the Boomer Days it was a common phrase to hear referred to as 'ye olde' which meant 'one of the old'. Of course, this term takes on a much better and warmer connotation today! Unfortunately, the phrase 'ye olde' is still in use now as a reference to anything of little value. Back in the day, 'ye olde' also had two common connotations. First it hinted at the idea of past grandeur. It referred to a 'golden era' during the past where certain values were accepted and admired, most likely referring to the 60's as a whole. What I mean by this is that a person was considered to be 'yummy', wearing specific clothing, perhaps being well-groomed, casual or formal depending upon the date. Second, it also referred to 'ye olde' itself. Everything about 'ye olde' was quite delightful and enjoyable. There had been sounds and canapes and flutes of trumpets playing, the door chimes had announced your arrival and even your shoes had been polished. Indeed, 'ye olde' was perfect in the traditional sense. Perhaps over time everything has changed and now the best value available is some fast food (or even drive through) parking lot money and a poorly constructed, over priced, poorly built home. Today, however, we believe that these items create the 'ye olde' or 'yummy' we were referring to. Well, not any more. In fact we've completely over-extended ourselves. Our houses are not only too big and too costly but they are designed with some exterior elements that make us perceive that they are now 'ye olde' items. This was not the case when they were new. We didn't mind pretty much anything. As the entire world can tell us and we are all still relatively young, houses that might have had to be repaired or built for more reason 20 years ago should not be built today. Even as far back as the 1970's and certainly over the last decade, some improvements have been needed. It's simply time to admit it and modify our attitude about the "ye olde". I'm not implying or saying that we should have large McMansions, but at least build
