For its third entry into the Red Orchestra series, the creators at Tripwire Interactive go back to basics and combine the virtues of open battlefields with a coherent narrative and gripping gameplay to create an unparalleled military experience. The Red Orchestra 2 and Red Orchestra 2: Vietnam games can be played in single-player, or with up to ten players online via a variety of game modes and strategies. A variety of vehicles are available to the player, many of them in the infantry role, allowing for a very realistic game experience. Many elements of gameplay have been refined, including the use of smoke grenades, professional weapons and new high-accuracy weapons. And the multiplayer settings have been overhauled and expanded for maximum online playability.Q: Meteor.users.find().count() returns null in publish function I've searched for this issue and didn't find any similar question or answer. In my Meteor-Scout app I have this code which works fine: client/index.html You have {{ totalCount }} members! client/main.js Template.index.tpl = function () { return Session.get('userCount'); } client/static/js/main.js Meteor.startup(function () { // populate data }); Meteor.publish("userCount", function () { var totalCount = Meteor.users.find({}).count(); return totalCount; }); client/main.html You have {{ countOfUser }} members! client/templates/userCount.html {{#each userCount}} {{this}} {{/each}} client/templates/index.html You have {{ userCount }} members! This code returns the expected result. But now I want to use the returned result in the publish function. Here is my updated code, that still fails with a null result: client/index.html c9d1549cdd

: An Open Letter to the National Basketball League June 3, 2017 – Fairness, equality, uniformity, and equal opportunity to win needs to be priority number one for the shooting guard in the NBA. Coaches lament that there is a dearth of players to watch and play due to the high percentage of high school and college stars selecting to play in the NBA. Players in high school appeal to more teams which makes it difficult to fill the three NBA teams. Opportunities are available and equal to other sports, but the one organization that most benefits from it is not the NBA. Playing in a college or high school gym gives a player a perfect basketball world, and free tuition to play basketball is the best education a young man can get. Coaches know this and build around these players that are entering the NBA Draft. Some players are very attractive to NBA teams, and they take advantage of the players who look amazing to get them. Sometimes the sneaker companies force this upon the owner of the team to get more exposure. Many schools have an image problem because the all the big brand logos are on the uniforms. Then the NBA has to work to sell the idea of more exposure for the league. Not the school. The most appealing area the NBA should be involved with would be conditioning. Do not allow the all-stars the ability to refuse basic conditioning drills. The NCAA, which accomplishes the best job of putting players into the NFL, does not even require them to do squats, sit ups, run around, or any major lifestyle change. If a top basketball player is overweight then he has failed as a basketball player. The NBA cannot choose who to condition, especially with Orlando Magic shooting guard Tobias Harris who has not only put on a lot of weight during his time in the league but also most of it in a relatively short time. With Christian Laettner we have seen how well that it works. Contracts should be fair. Let's face it, the NBA did institute the French League award. Why did this happen? Owner Emile Francis dared the NBA to do something about Steph Curry. Clearly the NBA listened and copied what was being done with the All Star Game and the Honorable Mention selections. Yes, they have to be honored as they would not feel like they were honored if not. All teams have a player currently in the top five of the fan voting. Obviously no guarantees that you will win but at least you have something. For the concept to work the owner of
