Q: How to save the output of a function as a variable in python I'm new to python and have been researching this but can't seem to find the answer. I'm trying to write a function that will be called as a reference in other functions. I have an example that calls a simple function and saves the output of that function: test = [['A','B','C','D'],['E','F','G','H']] def foo(x): print(x) foo(test) foo(test) Output ['A', 'B', 'C', 'D'] ['E', 'F', 'G', 'H'] I'm trying to make it so that I can create a variable which stores the output of the function. For example: If foo is called with test1 and then it is passed a test2. I want test2 to be stored in a variable. Any help would be appreciated. A Comparison of ion beam and gamma-ray induced mutations in human lymphoid cells with reference to the induction of micronuclei. The effects of mutagens such as ion beams and gamma-rays on in vitro bone marrow cultures were compared by measuring the frequency of cytogenetically visible micronuclei in the cytokinesis-blocked binuclear lymphocyte (BNL) population. The radiation frequencies were found to be very similar in this study and in our previous study in which BNL frequencies were measured in cytokinesis-blocked cells. We have also concluded that the gamma-ray data for micronuclei in BNL of MP lymphocytes were essentially identical to our previous data for micronuclei in another leukocyte type, PMN lymphocytes. Thus, using different leukocyte types, we have shown that ion beams and gamma-rays induce micronuclei (or induced BNL) in leukocytes in a manner which is similar when the frequencies of micronuclei (BNL) are considered, but different when considered with the MP lymphocyte micronuclei. Treatment of BNL populations with cyclophosphamide (0.5 to 10 microgram/mL) for 24 hr prior to ion treatment was found to markedly increase the frequencies of micronuclei in the BNL population. Cyclophosphamide in vitro metabolism is known to generate different electrophilic metabolites. Our data indicate that the mechanism causing the induction of micronuclei in BNL is mainly similar to that of gamma-rays, i.e., by second- and/or third-order reactions. to MNIST The numbers in the image were randomly generated, they were not drawn from MNIST. The photothermographic element or photosensitive material is a photographic element containing in combination an image recording medium consisting of a support having provided thereon a photosensitive layer and an image processing composition which, upon imagewise exposure of a photosensitive layer, is capable of forming an image, either by means of heat development or by means of scanning a laser beam. This material contains the light-sensitive silver halide grains which, in the presence of a catalytically active amount of a fogging agent and a reducing agent which are incorporated in the same image recording layer and which are able to react to form silver, when subjected to exposure. As a support for this photosensitive material, there is a support which has been employed in the field of image formation of a black and white image, including a paper sheet, a plastic film sheet, a metallic plate, textile material such as a non-woven fabric or an artificial fiber, and glass
