Perinatal Outcomes for Women with Gestational Diabetes Mellitus and Newborns 5.6. Obstetric and Pediatric Nephrology and Dialysis 33:1. The rate of Type 2 diabetes is increasing worldwide. Type 2 diabetes in particular is associated with elevated triglyceride levels. A number of studies have implicated elevated triglycerides in the development of coronary heart disease. Since there is considerable comorbidity between Type 2 diabetes and cardiovascular disease, treatments that can lower triglyceride levels in people with diabetes may have a significant impact on the development of cardiovascular disease. Aromatase inhibitors (AIs) are a group of drugs that are used to treat estrogen-dependent, hormone-responsive tumors, e.g., certain types of breast cancer. AIs act by inhibiting the aromatase enzyme that converts C19 androgens to C18 estrogens. The aromatase inhibitor anastrozole is approved by the FDA for the treatment of hormone-dependent breast cancer and anastrozole is known to lower serum triglyceride levels. The mechanism of action of anastrozole is believed to be independent of aromatase inhibition. See O'Brien, D. W.; Dodam, C.; Arimides, S. T.; Bell, M. J.; Hong, K. Y. J. Clin.
