'New Thought'? The term 'New Thought' is often used in the context of spiritualism or the New Age movement, and refers to a belief or philosophy based on the New Thought, a New Thought movement, or New Thought. The definition of a New Thought movement may not be appropriate. For example, the Bahá'í community may be called a New Thought movement but, as Christians, they hold belief in the Bible as its ultimate authority and not as a new thought. The New Thought community has a broad spectrum of belief. The New Thought writers refer to themselves as New Thought teachers, rather than New Thought leaders or gurus. Some New Thought teachers use the term New Thought to refer to a broad spectrum of spiritual practices ranging from the use of spiritual philosophy and spiritual practices to the development of one's consciousness in a manner that would be beneficial to one's spiritual growth. They also use the term New Thought as a synonym for New Age/Alternative spirituality. A: New Thought as a philosophy or religious movement is originated from several sources including the New Thought Movement, New Thought, which is a non-creedal religious denomination that developed in the United States in the mid-19th century. At present, New Thought refers to a spiritual tradition that originated in the same time period and whose adherents tend to be white Christians. Although the New Thought Movement is not a religious denomination, it is often associated with a variety of religious movements including Spiritualism, Christian Science, and other non-creedal religions such as the Unity, African-American movement, New Thought Christianity, and the Life Quest movement of Deepak
