Our goal is to promote personal and financial responsibility amongst the people of Uganda by providing and expanding access to family planning and reproductive health and rights. In his March 29, 2013 Ugandan Presidential oath, former International Monetary Fund Managing Director, Professor Yoweri Museveni stated that his administration was committed to improved fiscal discipline and the provision of good quality services in line with universal human rights. He pledged to urgently address the problem of poverty through measures like child rights, family planning and nutrition. In any society the empowerment of women to make informed decisions concerning their own health and wellbeing, the health and wellbeing of their children and the society in which they live can be defined as Human Rights. These rights are not a luxury that is available to women once they have completed their childbearing years. The right to plan and space their families, and to have access to safe and effective contraception, does not stop once they have reached the age of childbearing. Moreover, it is not an option to apply access to contraception in developing countries, in the same way that one would not say that access to education is an option. Education is not just a right, it is a means to achieve one's own freedom and equality. The key to the empowerment of women is the women themselves. The poor, vulnerable women who live at the bottom of the pyramid, those
