This effect first introduces the warmth, character, and punch of the original recording. It then uses acoustic filters to isolate the instrumental components, giving the DJ a new perspective. About iZotope iZotope is a professional audio software manufacturer that developed its first application called T-Pain Effect during the late 2000s. T-Pain Effect 3 or simply "The T Pain Effect" is primarily used by DJs in the electronic music and pop genre. One of the best aspects of The T Pain Effect is that it features two different options for audio playback. The first one is achieved by setting the audio in mono, and the second by setting it in stereo. This can give the effect a stronger punch in the background of the song. But it is advised to avoid this
