Why is it so difficult for Adobe to give out a single user licence with a single key with no activation? Or maybe they do but not when ordering through Cybershop - 5,000 people doing this in NZ? It's almost impossible to get anyone to answer the Cybershop phone but even then they say nothing to the point. They just agree with the standard answers and send you to another department. Please be aware that there is no such thing as a perpetual or permanent license for any Creative Cloud product. They are subscription-only, and no significant discounts from Adobes own prices are ever legitimately given. If Adobe is currently running a special promotion, then you will find it here. In corporate environment with maybe 10-20 people using

Adobe products globally, what would be the most economical way for us to obtain the licence using standalone software We want to layer media on our software center that users would be able to access to install to client PCs and activate. Internet connection is very restricted. Is there option to activate software using some key and leave it running offline for a year Just concerned that firewall rules/company cybersecurity policy may not allow us to access Adobe server for licence verification at every software launch. Are there any old school standalone solutions or what is the best way in this scenario Software updates also wont be possible or required in this environment. I have a mid-2011 Mac that runs High Sierra. It works fine and I have no reason to upgrade anytime soon. Adobes new Photoshop requires a newer OS

but I can rent their unsupported older version (ver. 21.2.4) on CC. Im thinking, it makes more sense to buy a used software package rather than pay rent to Adobe. I am not buying it for the Support. I just want a Photoshop and Illustrator package that is compatible with my OS system. Does that make sense 5ec8ef588b
