
Onbelay V2 Full Crack 54 _FULL_

leo came back to tell us that he had one more route to try. we headed down the trail to super crack buttress. as we came into the boulder section of the trail we noticed that it was raining. the plan was for us to continue on to super crack buttress and it would be a trek back up the trail. but the rain got heavier and the snow started to fall. we decided that we needed to take our chances and get wet. we ran into a nice lady (patty) who was really nice and offered to take us to the shelter to dry off a bit. she was very kind and offered to take us back to super crack buttress. we were a bit lost but she offered to show us the way. it was fun getting wet and cold with patty. so we headed back to super crack buttress and found the shelter. it wasn't really that sheltered and it was cold. still, it was a relief to get out of the rain. but, we were wet and we were done. we started back towards the car. you never know where the boundaries of the known begin and the unknown end. the wall of 90s is one of those spots in colorado. while it is one of the easiest climbing lines on the planet, the ancient hand and finger crack is not for the faint of heart. an intimidating feature with nearly 5,000 feet of vertical exposure and a scary amount of slab climbing, it is a true testament to the hard work and commitment of its original climbers. it is also a classic example of a crack line that has been described as being as much a product of the climbers involved as it is the rock. it was a unique experience for us to find this classic line, on a rooftop, in the darkness of a colorado night, and be the first to climb it.
