today, ive been trying to get my sousaphone more in the mix by adding some brass to the mix. as i have not played brass much in the past, i was looking for a new sample library that would allow me to play some nice, full-bodied brass. i havent been playing brass much for a few years, so i wanted something that would really get my fingers dancing. i also wanted to play a lot of root note, and the bottom end on the sample. one of the phrases i heard used in saxophone/horn parts really appealed to me, especially the snappy sounds of the french horns. i was interested in using them in a composition, and i found the brasssection vst library to be just what i was looking for. the brasssection vst makes sousaphone sounds more realistic and makes playing more fun. using the root note sound and a high-pass filter allows you to play sousaphone-like sounds from a full, fat, lower register. you can use the root note preset to make a smooth transition to playing full notes. available in both a vst 3.0 / au 4.0 / vst 2.0 and vst 2.0, the trumpet sections from the excellent kvr audio series are based on an unwavering attention to realism and quality. the samples were recorded in both concert and live room settings to capture every nuance of the instrument. small, but very capable, one-man project brassypop has been publishing free vst presets for half a decade now, and this is the first of the bunch. aside from the free vst presets and a demo of the program available from the main page, though, you can read a lot more about brassypop from his blog. if youve got the tools in place and the sample library, a plug-in like brassypop essentially automates many of the processes of composing brass rhythms. the main page of brassypop includes a list of common brass styles from the style sheets, such as brass, gizz, funky, and more.
