Letters to the Editor for March 12 Seventeen people in the 70-year-old basement of the Huber House restaurant have been living for the past weeks with rats, rodents, mice and fleas because the building's owners have refused to make repairs to the property. A letter submitted to the editor of the Republic by the Blackham County Republican Women reports on an illness outbreak among some 15 of our citizenry, who contracted the skin disease ecthyma. As we continue to address health concerns, we would like to say that Blackham County Public Health does not have a moratorium on cell phones. Twenty-one people have been charged in Washington County with carnal knowledge of a minor and seven more have been charged in adjoining Henry and Henry counties. Another two Henry County men are awaiting charges. Technically Incorrect offers a slightly twisted take on the tech that's taken over our lives. Enlarge Image Screenshot by Michael Hession/CNET While Samsung's Galaxy S9 and S9+ still have some hardware quirks, new reports are making me concerned about its software.

VietNamNetNews has published a report that says the South Korean manufacturer has added a feature to the S9 and S9+ that's causing an alarmingly high rate of accidental shootings. Apparently the new feature is designed to stop screens from locking while people are still making use of them. In other words, it prevents them from turning a phone into a paperweight. But in a misguided effort to preserve a mobile device from going dead, the feature accidentally shoots off a warning message, which
